

(Arnold H. Krumholz)

The official action of October 8, 2002, included a number of objections, including objections to the specification and claims, which applicants believe have been fully obviated by the response filed on April 4, 2003. Indeed, the Examiner had objected to the original claims on a number of bases, including an objection that the claims are generally narrative and indefinite and fail to conform with current U.S. practice. For this reason, the claims were canceled, and new claims which fully comply with all of the requirements of U.S. practice were added. The Examiner, however, deems the response to be unworthy because of an alleged failure to point out support in the original specification. The Examiner has not previously made any specific rejection on the basis of lack of support or any other objection to these claims under § 112.

Rule 111 merely requires that the applicants "distinctly and specifically point out the supposed errors in the Examiner's action," and reply to every ground of objection and rejection in the office action, and applicants submit that this is precisely what has been done here. However, in order to assist in expediting the prosecution and allowance of these claims, the specific support for each of these claims is now reiterated for the Examiner's benefit.

From original specification:

It is next noted that the latest office action includes an objection to the drawings. In this regard, the Examiner states that the drawings must show every feature of the claimed invention. In response, applicants submit herewith a formal set of the drawings. These include, where appropriate, as in Figure 2, inclusion of certain of the disclosed and claimed elements, in a "black line" configuration. This is deemed fully sufficient because, in each of these cases, the particular elements so shown, once disclosed, are entirely conventional, and would be readily discernable to anyone of even less than ordinary skill in this art. That is, applicants do not claim to have discovered or invented these particular elements, such as the sphincter mechanism, the specific types of pumps, the sensor, etc., but only in combination with the principal claimed elements of this invention. Therefore, the inclusion of these elements in the drawings in this manner is perfectly acceptable, and it is also clear that no new matter is included therein.

It is therefore clear that applicant has demonstrated clear and adequate support in the original disclosure for each of the newly added claims. It is therefore further clear that the present claims are clearly in condition for continued prosecution, and indeed for allowance based upon the patentable nature of these claims over the prior art. If, however, for any reason the Examiner still does not believe that such action can be taken at this time, it is respectfully requested that he/she telephone applicant's attorney at (908) 654-5000 in order to overcome any additional objections the Examiner may have to the continued prosecution of this application.
